Motorcycle Product of the Year: Electronics Sena SMH-10

Motorcycle intercoms have come a long way since we first started reviewing them 7 years ago.

Intercom systems still have a way to go. For example, Bluetooth doesn't quite seem to be the standard it should/could be; thin stereo speakers are a must (but should be easily replaceable) and, while we're at it, how about a replaceable battery pack too?

But in the meantime, there's the Sena SMH-10. Sena has a background in Bluetooth and wireless data transmission products for industry and the SMH-10 was their first motorcycle intercom.

They took a new and completely fresh approach to the problem and it worked, with an easy-to-use and reliable intercom.

Excellent sound quality and volume and an ingenious user interface make the Sena SMH-10 an obvious choice for a webBikeWorld 2010 Product of the Year Award.
